Athletic Complex Dedication.

The opening of a new turf field was commemorated this fall with a dedication on August 27. Construction around campus included the changes made to the stadium and the building of Breuninger Hall. The Euler Science Complex was also opened for use for the first time in the fall.

Outside the construction barriers, Taylor's campus welcomed a new rule regarding dancing in the LTC. Taylor's First All-Campus Swing Dance took place on Friday, May 10, 2013, in the stadium parking lot.

Festival of Colors.

On the evening of April 26, 2013, one of the groups from Dr. Jeff Sherlock's Management Analysis and Practice class put together an event with MESA for the entire campus. The event took place in the library parking lot. Students purchased colored powder to throw at other attendees, and the profits were donated to St. Martin's Community Center in Marion, Indiana. The event also included a slip-and-slide and a live band.

It starts out small: a foundation underground, often invisible if you're not looking for it. Slowly, it begins to rise—beam by beam, brick by brick. We begin to see what is to come, the vision for the future, until the day of completion arrives: the final touches have been made and the ribbon is cut. The building has finally reached the plans of the blueprints and can serve its purpose.

This year, the Euler Science Complex opened on the East side of campus for student use, allowing students to refine their learning and research. To the South, Gerig and English met their new neighbor, Breuninger Hall, just as the student body met the largest freshman class ever. (Breuninger's blueprints grace the cover and pages of this book.) To the West, a new athletic complex with a turf field and practice fields allowed students to strengthen their skills.

Taylor University is a campus of construction. Even before finishing these projects, new ones were on the drawing board to continue making improvements. We will continue to build on our learning, to build our student body, and to build upon the foundations laid before us.

Here is a chapter of that building.

You Only Vote Once (in College)

During the 2012 fall semester, TSO’s Global Engagement Cabinet spearheaded an election awareness campaign on campus.

YOVO, as the campaign was commonly referred to (You Only Vote Once-in College), encouraged students to become informed about the presidential candidates and to vote.

The importance of the YOVO campaign was “to help engage students with politics so they could have educated discussions around the elections,” said Global Engagement co-president, Anna Medearis.

Perhaps the most exciting part of the campaign took place on Wednesday, October 3, the night of the first presidential debate. Global Engagement partnered with Residence Life to show a live-stream of the televised debates in the atrium of the new Euler Science Center. Several hundred students poured into the atrium and watched the debate while enjoying election-themed snacks, such as “campaign trail mix” and red-and-blue “Oval Office” cookies.

Many Taylor students are from out of state, and there is a need for education on absentee voting. These students expressed a desire to vote in the election but struggled to find time to go through the process of registering and requesting their absentee ballots. In order to assist with this problem, students at the live debate were offered an opportunity to sign up to have their request forms delivered to their campus mailboxes. Members of the Global Engagement cabinet put many hours into finding, printing, and distributing the proper forms to students who had requested help with their absentee ballots.

Other YOVO events included Pursuit of Convicted Civility, an activity that Global Engagement partnered with Leadership Development to host. This panel’s goal was to have an open and honest discussion about choosing who to vote for, while still respecting the political beliefs of others.

“They (the YOVO events) were a social experience, but I was also learning at the same time,” said student Megan Adams.

Ring Downs.

The lights go down, and the flame from a single candle flickers as a circle of girls wait in anticipation. A hush falls over the group as the candle is passed from girl to girl, each pausing to look at what's tied to the candle — the engagement ring of one of their wing-mates.

This is the scene from one of the most beloved moments in a Taylor girl's wing life: a ring down. Ring downs are a time for celebrating the news and sharing the story of the engagement with the rest of the wing. The candle is passed around once so that everyone can see the ring, and then a second time so the newly engaged girl can blow out the candle. Then, the screaming begins.

Here are the stories of girls who experienced this candle-lit event this year.

Hannah Nelson & Kris Schonewill

Weeks before they became engaged, Hannah began planning (with Kris's mom) what she thought was a surprise party for Kris. However, when she arrived at this "surprise party," Hannah was the one surprised. They watched a video he made for her, and then he asked her to marry him. The surprise continued when their friends and family came running in after she said yes.

The Profession of Restoration.

Redemption, restoration, and revival are some of my favorite words. Taking a bad situation and making it better, giving it life, making it new again," senior Danny Benson said. "I feel like Environmental Science has those words written all over it." Benson studies Environmental Science, with a concentration on Earth and Physical Science.

After going on a family trip to Ethiopia to work at an orphanage, he learned that people walked miles to access clean water. The trip opened his eyes to helping others while being outdoors and enjoying God's creation. He weighed different school options, and the Taylor program pulled him in.

Benson has many different dreams he would like to pursue. Now it is just a matter of choosing one. One of those would be teaching Earth Science in an urban setting to give the students a chance to experience the wonders of God's creation outside the city limits.

"I think it's a great way to disrupt the cycle of poverty by giving inner-city kids a chance to get soil under their fingertips," he said. Holistic and transformational development also has been one of his passions.

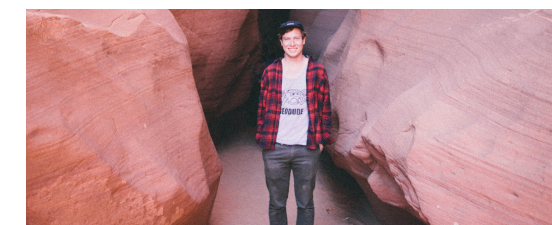

The Environmental Science department at Taylor University is conducive to hands-on experiences and provides trip opportunities for students.

"I get the chance to work with my hands in the great outdoors," said Benson, which he loves. Benson has had the opportunity to work with local missionaries on transformational development projects in Guatemala, to lay out Geospatial Analysis tools, and has even checked groundwater levels in the Taylor Arboretum's reconstructed wetland.

In whatever he ends up doing, Benson wants to use his degree to further God's Kingdom.

"Jesus was in the restoring business, too," he said. "The Scriptures give us numerous accounts of Him taking unhealthy, inadequate situations and making them whole again. He makes all things new! So, I want to be in His profession: restoration."

A Milestone

1,000. It's not an easy number to reach in the world of college basketball, but there was no question when senior forward Erika Redweik made it:

"I knew exactly when it happened because our team and the crowd went crazy," she said.

Redweik saw her career point totals soar past 1,000 in the January 19 game against Goshen College. With 23 points in the game, she had 3 points to spare after breaking the 1,000-point barrier.

The cheers from the crowd were not a complete surprise. Redweik made 1,000 points one of her long-term college goals and discovered her junior year she had a strong chance to reach it.

"(I) knew that if I continued to work as hard as I was, I would reach this goal some(time) in the middle of my senior-year season," she said.

The team also kept her focused on the goal.

"I knew it was about to happen because Tess Rudolph and Erin Guarneri (as well as the rest of the team) were getting really excited and kept informing me of how many points I was away from reaching that 1,000th point," she said. "All I could think about was how blessed I was to have so many people who supported me and were so proud and happy for me to achieve this milestone."

Redweik finished her season with 391 points and built up 1,123 points in her overall college career. She is only the 20th Taylor women's basketball player to pass the 1,000-point mark, but two of her teammates share that honor with her.

The same day Redweik reached 1,000 points, senior Guarneri was honored during the game for achieving the same goal the week earlier against Indiana Wesleyan. Fellow senior Rudolph added her name last year to the short list of Trojans who have exceeded the 1,000-point milestone.

"It was a special feeling and in some way a moment of relief, that I finally reached that 1,000th point," Redweik said.

The Other Side of Events.

SAC - Student Activities Council. You may not know about the specifics of the organization, but I'm sure you're aware of its events. It's known for its musical performances at MyGen and Nostalgia Night. This year I had the privilege of serving on the SAC cabinet and experiencing the other side of these events. Being on cabinet means that I'm not usually surprised at the actual show but I do get to see my favorite acts a total of four times, which definitely makes up for it!

Weekly meetings are always looked upon with excitement because we never know the topic of discussion. It could range from theme ideas such as election parties or a Hunger Games study break to decoration suggestions like tying hundreds of CDs together to create a backdrop for the stage.

The beauty and humor comes when outrageous ideas that are thrown into conversation as a joke become reality. It's a place where creativity flows and every suggestion is considered. In a group of 12 to 15 students, an environment and bond is formed where ideas are bounced around and somehow an hour or so later it come out as an event.

Prep work also plays a large role in our time and effort as a SAC member. Weekends prior to shows are dedicated to making decorations and playlists, ordering ridiculously large quantities of food and random supplies and hauling giant paper cut-outs across campus to their proper destinations.

A new event this year was the Go-Green Party held in the Euler Science Complex that celebrated not only St. Patrick's Day but the preservation of our environment. It came with everything you would expect at a Go-Green Party: homemade shamrock shakes, mounds of tater tots, potato stamps to design cards with and, most importantly, karaoke. I was designated a spot at the shake station, which meant by the end of the night each and every finger was stained a nice, minty, green hue.

Weekend programming has been strongly encouraged this year and will continue to expand next fall. With this increase in engagements, there have been collaborations with ICC (Inter-Class Council) to put on these programs as well as teaming with The Ilium to distribute yearbooks to students. A goal of TSO this year involved groups within the organization supporting each other. I'll be sad to say goodbye to this small group of planners but I look forward to hearing about what crazy ideas they'll come up with next year. Word of advice: even the wildest of notions can come into existence!

4. Students dance under a tent located in the KSAC parking lot. The playlist included artists Carly Rae Jepsen and Daft Punk and modern swing music from Caravan Palace.

1. Cassidy Losey and Kyle Salsbery dance to swing music at Taylor's first official dance on May 10. A change in the Life Together Covenant in February allowed for a certain number of university-sponsored dances each semester. Each cabinet of TSO had a role in planning the dance.

2. Jordan Arvin and Kelsey Carr practice swinging at dancing lessons taught by Carr's aunt, Melodie Carr, on Tuesday, May 7. Students who showed up at the lessons received a $1 discount on admission to the Friday-night dance.

3. James Dolezal and Allison Abernathy attend the dance, themed "Gatsby: A Roaring Celebration." The most recent film adaptation of F. Scott Fitzgerald's "The Great Gatsby" was also released that day in theaters.
